James Young : A Beer Before Lunch: Stories From Brazilian Bars / Dispatches From Recife 2008-2011 before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised A Beer Before Lunch: Stories From Brazilian Bars / Dispatches From Recife 2008-2011:

The short story collection A Beer Before Lunch is about how to become lost in the occasionally anarchic, always intoxicating city of Recife in the north east of Brazil. Funny, touching and occasionally tragic, it covers football, friendship, love, sex, death, loss and everything in between. James Young lived in Recife between 2007 and 2012. He is now based in the considerably less exciting city of Belo Horizonte in the south east of Brazil, where he writes about the country and its football for The Independent, Sports Illustrated, Rolling Stone, ESPN, Al-Jazeera, the Folha de Sao Paulo and assorted other publications and sites.

About the Author Born in Belfast, James Young writes about Brazil and Brazilian football for The Independent, The Independent on Sunday, Rolling Stone, Sports Illustrated, ESPN, Vice, The Observer, The Howler, The Blizzard, Folha de So Paulo, The New York Times Goal Blog, and World Soccer, among other sites and publications. He has lived in Brazil for almost ten years. In addition to journalism, he is a writer of fiction and has been shortlisted for the Fish and Sean O Faolain short story prizes.
