Alan Walker, Tony Maltby : Ageing Europe (Rethinking Ageing Series) before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Ageing Europe (Rethinking Ageing Series):

What role do senior citizens have in European society in the late 20th century? This text considers this question and presents a portrait of how older people are perceived by the general public in the EU, and how they view themselves and the ageing process.

"...a boon to post-registration and degree students looking for up-to-date statistics." - Nursing Times "For the moment Ageing Europe takes its place as the most accessible, comprehensive, contemporary account of EU social policy and European attitudes to ageing available...a welcome addition to the excellent Open University Press series 'Re-thinking Ageing'." - Sociology "I found this book intriguing, hopeful, and challenging for those of us committed to providing quality care for our older population in ways that are both socially sound and fiscally acceptable." - BMJ "Those who wish to gain a comparative picture of the economic, health, social and living conditions of older people in Europe will seize upon this book." - Age Ageing "...the major strength of this book is its employment of a wide range of research findings, principally analyses by the EU Observatory on Ageing and Older People and the data from a special Eurobarometer survey for the European Commission in 1992...The authors should be commended for their lucid and informative use of such research to set out the need to promote more fully the social integration of older people and to deal with the problems standing in the way of what they term 'productive ageing'. As their final sentence notes, 'In ageing societies it is in everyone's interest to promote full citizenship of older people.' Readers will find this book to be an excellent primer for such a task." - Generations About the Author Alan Walker is Professor of Social Policy at the University of Sheffield. Chair of the European Observatory on Ageing and Older People. Author of numerous books, reports and scientific papers on ageing and social policy, including The Caring Relationship (with H. Qureshi, Macmillan, 1989); The New Generational Contract (edited, UCL Press, 1996); and Changing Services for Older People (with L. Warren, OU Press, 1996). Tony Maltby is Lecturer in Social Policy at the University of Birmingham. He contributes regularly as an abstractor for the journal Ageing and Society on European issues and is the author of Women and Pensions in Britain and Hungary (Avebury, 1994). His main research interest is the comparative study of pensions and income in later life. He is a member of the executive of the British Society of Gerontology and its Honorary Treasurer.
