Picture on the cover features 'Keeler's Korner', owned and operated by the parents of our brother-in-law, F. Keeler, who was married to our sister. Several generations of family were sprinkled throughout this book, along with numerous pictures. So, yes, I loved reading it. I learned some things I didn't know about the area where the Echelbargers raised their family of 9 children, and served the community. I have seen this book in the homes of several family members.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Miss those days.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Five StarsBy D. GoosmanLove it!

In 1917, the community of Alderwood Manor was developed on Puget Mill Company's logged-off land, where the city of Lynnwood now stands. Promoted as an agricultural community, the 30-acre demonstration farm brought emigrants from all over the country to try their hand at raising chickens. Alderwood Manor became one of the largest egg-producing areas in America and boasted a hotel, a school, a Tudor-style brick general store, and a community center. As a result of the Depression, many of the farms in Alderwood Manor were subdivided and sold. The site of Alderwood Mall was once a homestead in the thriving rural community, halfway between Seattle and Everett on the interurban railroad line. Several restored Alderwood Manor buildings, as well as interurban Car No. 55, may still be seen today at Heritage Park in Lynnwood.

About the AuthorAuthors Marie Little and Kevin K. Stadler of the Alderwood Manor Heritage Association have selected over 200 vintage photographs and images to illustrate the fascinating history of this distinctive community. Formed in 1991, the Alderwood Manor Heritage Association is a group of homeowners, neighbors, and former residents who are concerned about the vanishing history of the area and have endeavored to preserve its unique heritage.
