There could have been more photo's of accomodationMargaret Gordon3 of 3 people found the following review helpful. The Margo Guide to Budget Hotels in FranceBy Rebecca of "European hotels do not have facecloths. I always pack mine. Showers: I haven't figured out why some showers don't have shower curtains on them." ~MargoOn my last trip to France, this book would have come in handy. One of the hotels I stayed at in Paris did not even have shower curtains and when I sat on the bed, the bed literally collapsed. This was in a very nice hotel and I was shocked. While the tour guide seemed oblivious to the predicament, I never forgot the experience. The breakfast the next morning and tour was of course worth the effort of having to put the bed back together.A guide by Margo would have helped me select my own hotel accommodations that weekend. I also found I wanted to spend more time in various locations and a tour to Paris seemed rushed on a weekend. I wanted to spend an entire week, no a month just wandering around France. When we traveled to Provence, I had no idea where to stay and while we found nice hotels, it was purely by chance and we had no idea what to expect. When at the Louvre I wandered around not realizing I could get a portable headset to explain some of the paintings.Throughout this guide to Budget Hotels in France, Margo selects the best hotels and explains why a double bed is cheaper than twin beds and why you might be able to ask for a "zip and lock" king-size bed (they might put two beds together), but why king-size beds are not something you will find in Budget hotels.If you love to cook, you might want to look for the Culinary School listing. There are detailed descriptions of all the hotels, including unique creative touches like she mentions the way the rooms are decorated. Will you have to climb stairs, do you want a garden/patio, does the room have a view of the Eiffel Tower?Margo spent ten weeks traveling around France and went to 30 of the most popular cities to explore the hotels she has written about. She spent her own money and time to produce this book and no hotel or restaurant has paid to be in this book. If where you stay is as important as the sites you will visit, then this is the book for you. A list of French Phrases for checking in is included. If you want to spend more money eating out and touring the cities, then this guide will also help you save money.~The Rebecca Review3 of 3 people found the following review helpful. A solo traveler's way to beat the single supplement!By JetwriterYou don't need a roommate to share the cost of travel when you can stay in a delightful Paris hotel for just $50 per night, with a private bath. Margo Classe does our homework for us, finding the little gems that even travel agents don't know about. These are small, Mom Pop places that are not even listed on the Internet. This book lists the charming, affordable hotels in cities throughout France. Each listing perfectly describes the place in great detail, giving contact info. Her other books do the same for Spain, Italy and Britain Ireland. If only her books covered the world!

This hotel guidebook to the best budget hotels in France is packed with detailed descriptions on more than 300 charming family-owned hotels in 30 popular cities in France. The hotel information includes the best rooms with room numbers for family, triple, double and single occupancies. The book also includes information on restaurants, tips on transportation and making hotel reservations, useful websites, laundromats, packing unusual items, foreign phrases, what to do before leaving home, etc. The criteria for selecting hotels are that they must be very clean, safe, inexpensive, centrally located and, above all, have a private bathroom in the room.

From the PublisherMany of us lead very structured lives, so when it is time for a vacation, I would think you would want a more relaxed schedule. You can accomplish this by planning your own vacation. Take charge of your trip, arrange your own day tours and have some fun at your own pace. I have made it quite easy by doing all the research for you. I have put together a list of wonderful charming budget hotels which includes detailed information on affordable rooms for people traveling alone, with a companion or as families.About the AuthorMargos fascination and passion for travel are rooted in a background that reflects an incredible journey of triumph over tragedy. Abandoned at age four, Margo was raised in orphanages, where she remained until her late teens. She survived numerous episodes of abuse and through a resilient spirit managed to escape by reading about faraway places, educating herself in the process. She has traveled extensively throughout Europe, personally visiting each hotel listed in these guides. To call the "Hello" hotel guidebook series a "labor of love" is truly an understatement. Margo Classs life philosophy is simple: "Difficulties are opportunities to prove your greatness by overcoming them." So go ahead, take a chance, take a trip and have a fabulous time with the adventure. Margo and her husband, Tyrell, live in Los Angeles, California.
