Julianna Maya Cruz : Two Chilies Dos Chiles before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Two Chilies Dos Chiles:

Cruz takes us on a journey through a conversation with her grandfather Julian. The place is the kitchen, the vehicle is making tasty New Mexican chile and the Lessons are paralleled life lessons. This is a intimate intergenerational interchange between a grandfather and granddaughter talking about family, hardships and our connectedness to each other. It is a book that will inspire your family to start their own discussion of discovery of the flavors of their own "chiles" and their own roots "races".

Julianna had been pestering her grandpa, Julian, to teach her how to make their family's special New Mexico green chile, but now that he is finally ready to what she needs most is his help with her social studies project. When he suggests that they can do both at the same time, Julianna is skeptical. "But how are you going to tell me about why our family came to Riverside and make chili at the same time?" "Making really good chile is a lot like telling a good story." Follow Julianna as she spends the day with Grandpa Julian, learning about her family's history -- and the secret ingredient to their version of New Mexico Green Chile -- along the way.
