Comprehensive guidebook to walking the GR7 through Andalucia in southern Spain. Both variants, the northern that visits Cordoba, and the southern that goes through Granada and the Sierra Nevada are included. This wonderfully varied route starts at the southernmost tip of Spain on the coast at Tarifa, and meanders through the provinces of Cadiz and Malaga before dividing. The northern fork heads through Cordoba and Jaen provinces (718km, 34 to 41 days in total), while the southern fork passes through Almeria and Granada (735km, 35 to 42 days). Both routes finish at Puebla de don Fadrique. The fully waymarked route crosses seven stunning natural parks and the Sierra Nevada national park, home to mainland Spain's highest peak - Mulhacen. All the information needed to plan a trek is included. Stage maps use official IGN mapping. Detailed route descriptions are given for around 60 days of walking, with options for creating shorter sections and days. The GR7 avoids tarmac roads wherever possible, instead taking ancient trade routes, bridlepaths and even goat tracks, there are only a few sections of steep ascent, so this route is suitable for walkers of reasonable fitness and navigational ability. The GR7 is also part of the European E4 route.

About the Author Kirstie Shirra is a freelance writer and environmental campaigner. Climbing mountains since she could walk, she has traveled throughout Europe and the Americas but always ends up back in the wonderful mountains of northwest Scotland where she now lives. Michelle Lowe is a writer, researcher and campaigner who loves walking. Based in Edinburgh she has spent time living, travelling and trekking in Ecuador, Peru, Nepal and Europe. Contributor Miguel Ángel Santaella has travelled and walked in Asia, New Zealand, Central Europe and Spain and is the creator of the www.rutasylviajes.net website which posts GPS routes for each stage of the GR7.
