major trip. However, as it turns out, the authors were fairly well-off, which is essentially what allowed them to do their round-the-world trip. (They lived on the cheap while abroad, but had a huge chunk of change to come home to.) While I don't hold their wealth against them, it certainly doesn't help shoestring-budget me -- basically, their "advice" came down to, "First, save up $125,000..." :) There are some useful charts in the back, lists of travel and packing advice -- however, a good 95% of the book is the story of their actual trip. Also, as would be expected, the financial details are about 10 years old, so of little use now. In summary -- it's fun to read about the trip, but it doesn't really give the kind of advice that the title would lead you to expect. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. extremely motivating! By Ann Hook I found David's book to be entertaining, full of useful information and extremely motivating. Most of us harbor a dream that we push deep inside because "it's just not practical" or we have no real plan to make it a reality. This book offered me hope for those dreams. It was inspiring to follow two ordinary middle class people pursue a vision and intimately share their experience. Following their journey was exciting and offered practical advice. I highly recommend this book to anyone seeking practical tips on making your dream a reality! 0 of 1 people found the following review helpful. A nice book, but holds little advice. By A Customer This book is nice and interesting, it really can give you inspiration and in me it has awoken an old dream, to travel around the globe. BUT, this book is'n a guid-book and it doesn't give you a lot advice. It's more of a journal, in which the authour tells us about his adventures during a bike trip across the US. What I liked about this book is that the authour, D. Wooten, isn't an athlet and not an experienced bike rider, and it's nice to resd about the challenges and the triumphs of the "real people".

With successful careers in midswing at age twenty-nine, David and Susan Wooten decided to take a calculated risk and leave the corporate world behind temporarily to pursue a dream. "We're Outta Here!" chronicles their 14 month bicycling and backpacking adventure through 30 countries around the world. From Hiroshima to Kathmandu and Calcutta to the south of France, the couple traveled with a pair of 14 by 24 inch backpacks, a tight budget and a very open mind. Inspiring words of wisdom and great travel tips told with a candid, upbeat flair.

How many times have you just wanted to pack it all up, say goodbye to the rat race and take a trip with no end in sight? Chronicled in their autobiographical adventure, the discoveries, surprises and sheer excitement of wanderlust are revealed in an entertaining guide to unorthodox travel. -- Thom Storey, The Tennessean Newspaper, Nashville, TN About the Author David Wooten grew up in the Carolinas and earned a degree in Journalism from the University of South Carolina. He is currently the Vice President of Sales and Marketing for a national sun care company.
