About the Author Frank Lev is a teacher, street musician, traveler, story teller, and writer. He has traveled extensively to over 60 countries and has lived in 3 countries abroad. He has lived in South Korea for the last many years, enjoying teaching public speaking and science in a university in Seoul. He has used his short stories as a starting point for storytelling competitions, placing 1st in 2011, 2nd, and 3rd in the national Korean Toastmasters competition. He has a music education degree from Youngstown State University, his hometown school, an AS in physics from City College in San Francisco, where he studied with world famous science educator Paul Hewitt, and a masters in Education from San Francisco State University. He has also done a lot of Kundalini yoga and Vipassana meditation in an effort to find himself. He's still looking, but if he ever does find himself, he will probably write a story about it. The best moments in his life are the ones between when he gets a good idea and when he finishes developing it. This January 1st, 2015 he turned 100 on Venus.
