the flora and fauna of Boulder CountyBy Michael FenertyBoulder County contains more than 45,000 acres of open space, and is a place where the plains meet the mountains, resulting in a very biodiverse environment.I liked the book's arrangement by seasons; where to go, when to go, and what to see in spring, summer, fall, and winter. The author, who also published the Peterson "Field Guide to the North American Prairie," provides useful information about the many wildflowers, butterflies, and other wildlife that can be seen in the numerous habitats found in the county. The book also contains an "earth almanac" describing the natural events one can expect throughout the year. A "destination directory" provides directions to various hiking trails. I found it an invaluable reference.

If you've ever wondered what to do on a pewter gray November day, where to search for ptarmigan in winter or the first orchids of spring, or when to listen for bugling elk and trumpeting sandhill cranes, this is the book for you. Discover the wonders and joys of nature by tracking these seasonal occurrences, and knowing when and where to look for them. ""Wild Boulder County"" reveals the magic that surrounds us and opens new pathways into the natural world.
